

Deep Report • Illustrative format sample

A deeper reading, with evidence and uncertainty kept close

A fixed illustrative chart shows the structure, depth, and boundaries of the purchased format.

This frozen editorial sample demonstrates the exact report structure and depth. It is not a personal reading, a purchased artifact, or model-quality evidence.

AI transparency

Purchased reports contain AI-generated interpretation based on a cultural BaZi lens. This hand-authored, frozen editorial sample demonstrates the format only. Neither is a prediction or a substitute for professional medical, mental-health, legal, financial, employment, or emergency support.

Treat every cultural interpretation as a reflection prompt, not a fact or instruction. Keep lived evidence, personal agency, and qualified professional support primary.

In this report

- Personality
- Career direction and guidance
- Relationship patterns
- Three-year trends for reference

Calculated chart basis

- Year: 乙亥 • Yin Wood / Pig
- Month: 壬午 • Yang Water / Horse
- Day: 甲戌 • Yang Wood / Dog
- Hour: 庚午 • Yang Metal / Horse

Day Master: 甲 • Wood

Five-element fixed-weight tally: Wood 2.5 • Fire 3.5 • Earth 2.5 • Metal 1.5 • Water 2.5

Personality

This section uses the chart as a vocabulary for noticing temperament, not as a verdict about character. It holds patient observation beside the urge to answer quickly, then asks where each response is useful. The aim is to compare the pattern with ordinary experience and leave room for change.

Calculated fact

Day Master: 甲 (Yang Wood), Wood, yang

Evidence: Day Master

Cultural interpretation

When there is time to take in detail, patient observation may support a calm and well-judged response. The useful evidence is practical: whether you notice what others miss, revise an early impression, or make a clearer decision after pausing. If that does not match experience, the reading should not be forced.

Evidence: Year pillar • Month pillar

Cultural interpretation

Under time pressure, the wish to respond quickly may interrupt that steadiness. This need not mean inconsistency; it may show that pace changes which strength is available. Compare a hurried moment with a spacious one and notice whether preparation, stakes, or company explains the difference more convincingly than the chart.

Evidence: Day Master • Wood tally

Cultural interpretation

Taken together, these signals suggest a question about timing rather than a fixed label: when does reflection become discernment, and when does it become delay? A sound interpretation should account for both sides and should become more precise only after repeated examples, including examples that contradict the first impression.

Evidence: Year Ten God • Month Ten God

A small action

- For seven days, keep a two-line attention log: note one decision, then record what became clearer after a short pause. Do not score yourself; look only for conditions that helped.
- Choose one low-stakes decision and set a brief stopping rule before considering it. Afterwards, compare the result with a decision made at your usual pace and keep whichever method produced clearer evidence.

What this cannot establish

- A birth chart cannot establish a stable personality trait, level of ability, or preferred way of thinking. Mood, practice, language, stress, and the demands of a particular setting can all produce a different pattern.

- This sample also cannot tell whether pausing is helpful in every context. If lived examples repeatedly point elsewhere, keep those examples. The interpretation remains useful only while it opens a better question without narrowing identity.

Career direction and guidance

This section looks at work through collaboration and decision habits, not through promises about status or outcomes. It places steady preparation beside the pull between autonomy and teamwork, then checks how that tension behaves across projects, roles, and real constraints. Context remains the stronger source of evidence.

Calculated fact

Year Ten God: Rival (劫财)

Evidence: Year Ten God

Cultural interpretation

In work with a visible sequence, steady preparation may help turn ambiguity into manageable steps. Look for evidence in how you frame a problem, surface dependencies, or reduce avoidable rework. The signal is less convincing if preparation becomes detached from the decision that the work actually requires.

Evidence: Year pillar • Month pillar

Cultural interpretation

The autonomy-and-teamwork tension may be most noticeable when ownership is unclear. Working alone can preserve focus, while timely collaboration can expose a blind spot. Instead of choosing one style as the correct identity, notice which decisions need independent depth and which become safer after another perspective.

Evidence: Day Master • Wood tally

Cultural interpretation

The combined pattern points toward explicit working agreements: what you own, what needs consultation, and when a decision is ready. This is a conditional strength, not a career prescription. Its value should be judged by completed work, clearer coordination, and feedback from the people affected.

Evidence: Year Ten God • Month Ten God

A small action

- Before one current task, write three lines: the decision to make, the evidence still missing, and the person whose input could materially change it. Review the note after the task closes.
- In one meeting, name the boundary between consultation and ownership. Test whether that sentence reduces repetition or hesitation, then adjust the wording rather than turning it into a permanent rule.

What this cannot establish

- These chart signals cannot establish suitability for a role, predict advancement, or decide whether to stay in or leave a workplace. Skills, opportunity, obligations, discrimination, and organizational conditions carry far more explanatory weight.
- A preference observed in one project may reverse in another. Treat feedback, work samples, and practical constraints as primary evidence; use this interpretation only to formulate a small question that can be checked without risking livelihood.

Relationship patterns

This section considers communication and boundaries without assigning a relationship destiny. It holds careful listening beside the need for both closeness and space, then asks how those needs are expressed in actual conversations. Mutual consent, direct communication, and each person's lived account remain primary.

Calculated fact

Month pillar: 壬 (Yang Water) / 午 (Horse)

Evidence: Month pillar

Cultural interpretation

Careful listening may create a sense of steadiness when another person wants room to finish a thought. The relevant evidence is not silence itself, but whether questions become more accurate and both people feel understood. Listening that hides disagreement would be a different pattern and deserves a different response.

Evidence: Year pillar • Month pillar

Cultural interpretation

The wish for closeness and the need for space can coexist without cancelling each other. Tension may arise when one need is stated and the other is assumed. Notice whether clarity improves when timing, availability, and the meaning of space are discussed rather than inferred.

Evidence: Day Master • Wood tally

Cultural interpretation

Together, the signals suggest making boundaries legible while keeping them revisable. A boundary can protect attention and still invite connection; closeness can be welcome without requiring constant access. The interpretation fits only if it supports more truthful, reciprocal communication in real situations.

Evidence: Year Ten God • Month Ten God

A small action

- After one meaningful conversation, write down what the other person actually said, what you inferred, and one question that could distinguish the two. Ask only if the moment and relationship make it appropriate.
- Draft one gentle boundary sentence with a time, need, and next point of contact. Try it in a low-stakes setting, listen to the response, and revise it collaboratively rather than treating it as a script.

What this cannot establish

- A chart cannot establish compatibility, another person's feelings, or the future of a relationship. Attachment history, safety, power, culture, communication, and changing circumstances may matter in ways this symbolic lens cannot observe.
- The same pause may feel considerate in one relationship and distant in another. Prefer consent and direct feedback over symbolic inference. If a situation involves coercion, fear, or harm, this reflection is not an appropriate source of guidance.

Three-year trends for reference

The three annual pillars are best read together as changing reflection lenses, not as event forecasts. The sequence can organize attention across three years, while responsibilities, relationships, opportunity, and choice remain capable of changing what actually happens.

Calculated fact

Year pillar: 乙 (Yin Wood) / 亥 (Pig)

Evidence: Year pillar

Cultural interpretation

Begin with the first annual pillar as a baseline. Compare its emphasis with the Day Master and note where the chart appears coherent, where it pulls in another direction, and which reading is supported by ordinary evidence.

Evidence: 2026 annual pillar • Day Master

Cultural interpretation

Then compare the second and third pillars rather than treating either in isolation. A shift in symbolic emphasis can frame a question about adaptation, but it does not announce that an event will occur.

Evidence: 2027 annual pillar • 2028 annual pillar

A small action

- Create one three-year note with a current baseline, an observable priority, and a review date. Revise it when facts change instead of protecting the original interpretation.
- At each review, name one continuity and one meaningful change. Test a small adjustment only where the cost is low and the result can be observed.

2026

2026 annual pillar: 丙 (Yang Fire) / 午 (Horse)

In 2026, use the annual pillar to notice where current priorities may need firmer sequencing. Compare one early choice with one reviewed after feedback; the contrast is evidence, not a forecast.

For 2026, record one priority and the condition that would justify changing it.

Nothing in the 2026 pillar guarantees a particular event; present conditions may point elsewhere.

2027

2027 annual pillar: 丁 (Yin Fire) / 未 (Goat)

In 2027, let the changing pillar frame a question about adjustment. Notice what deserves continuity, what can be tested at low risk, and whether real conditions support the symbolic contrast.

For 2027, revisit the prior note before choosing one reversible adjustment.

The 2027 contrast cannot rank choices or replace current information from the people involved.

2028

2028 annual pillar: 戊 (Yang Earth) / 申 (Monkey)

In 2028, read the final pillar as a prompt to integrate what the earlier notes taught you. Keep the pattern only if it improves a present decision without pretending to settle the future.

For 2028, compare the three notes and carry forward only what the evidence supports.

The 2028 note remains provisional and should be discarded if lived evidence contradicts it.

What this cannot establish

- Annual pillars cannot establish timing, cause, or outcome. A coherent story assembled after the fact may still be coincidence, selective attention, or the effect of circumstances the chart does not contain.
- The three-year frame is a convenience for reflection, not a complete account of a life period. New information can make a different lens more useful at any point.

Format and contract details

Purchase contract shown: lumina-deep-report-purchase-v3 • Artifact schema shown: lumina-deep-report-artifact-v3 • Content contract shown: lumina-deep-report-content-v3 • Calculation version: bazi-ts-preview-2026-08-24.v3 • Safety policy shown: lumina-report-safety-v2 • Generation policy shown: lumina-paid-report-generation-v2 • Sample content source: lumina-editorial-illustrative-format-sample-v2 • PDF renderer: lumina-successor-paid-report-pdf-v1 • PDF font version: Lumina Sans SC 2.004-static-400 • PDF font SHA-256: 898138e44d587b720e1ef2b3f09ed43fa42e3f9508cf0728403adab08ea15061 • Sample AI generated: false